

WOES OF THE WINNS

How a Prospecting Trip Was Nipped In the Bud.

"BUCKSKIN JIMMY" DID IT

REDESKINS OVERHAULED THE FATHER AND SON.

Indian Police and a Big Gun Brought the Winns to a Standstill—Charged With Stealing Government Goods, Brought to Salt Lake and Acquitted.

Indian Policeman Wichitz, stolid, fat and sphinx-like, sat in the United States court room yesterday morning in the resplendent and glory of a brand new uniform, with brass buttons and red trimmings. His little eyes twinkled and gleamed in satisfaction, for he knew that he was the star witness, the man on whom great things depended. He was the cynosure of all eyes; he knew it, and his vanity was tickled thereby. He was not seen during the afternoon, so it may be that he has run across a more terrifying type of lawbreaker than is sold on that notorious place, the Duchesne "strip." In fact, Policeman Wichitz may acquire the idea that his authority extends to Salt Lake. However, he has the reputation of being a good Indian, even if he is not a dead one, and he will, therefore, likely eschew anything more powerful than soda water or stronger than cigarettes.

The case in which Mr. Wichitz had come all the way from the Ouray agency to be a witness was the United States vs. Denis A. Winn, his son, John Winn, and W. J. Burgess, all of whom have been indicted for the larceny of about $35 worth of provisions from the Ouray Indian agency's commissary.

The two Winns are in themselves characters of note and curiosity. In that there was a whole tribe of Winns about the federal court room and the corridors of the Dooly building all day yesterday. These were Winns of the first and second and into the third generations. Winn with hair that age had touched to whiteness and Winns whose sole ambition in life was the conquest and possession of the nurse bottle. All of these sorrowful women and crying children had come down from Vernal, east of the Ouray agency, to testify in the case.

During the most interesting part of Policeman Wichitz's testimony, as he grew eloquent to Interpreter Henry E. Harris, in the jacket of his native sandhills, one of the Winns of the third generation began to weep. Judge Marshall frowned, the bailiffs were shocked and the jury was overcome. The mother rushed out of the court room in embarrassment and hushed the little one to sleep with Kate Greenway lullaby. And thereupon the trial proceeded.

What Was Stolen.

The three men were charged with having stolen 2 tin pots, valued at 50 cents; 3 sacks of flour of 100 pounds each, valued at $12; 2 sacks of ground sugar of 100 pounds each, valued at $10; 1 box of laundry soap of 80 pounds, valued at $6, and "divers other goods and personal property," to the grand jurors unknown, valued at $30, from the commissary of the Ouray agency on the night of June 1, 1898. But Attorney J. M. Hamilton, who conducted the case of the Winns, objected to their being considered along with that of Burgess, and the court upheld his contention. Burgess will not be tried until September.

Denis A. Winn's story is that Burgess had agreed to steal him so that he could work a copper prospect, which he had located in the northeast corner of Nevada, 400 miles away. He was sitting at Burgess' place at the agency on June 1. While he and his son took the horses to the blacksmith shop to shoe them, Burgess, who was in the wagon with the provisions that he had agreed to furnish, he did so, and the party started at 4 o'clock. Seven or eight miles out of Ouray they camped.

Overhauled by Redskins.

Next morning about 9 o'clock, as they were breaking camp preparatory to continuing their journey, Policeman Wichitz, "Buckskin Jimmy" and the redskins, believing that the two men had stolen stuff from the commissary, wanted them to come back. There was considerable argument about the case, but as the Winns didn't understand the language of the Utes, nor the Indians comprehend English, it was impossible to settle the point by discussion.

"Buckskin Jimmy" brought forth a powerful persuader—a gun with six cartridges. Thereupon the procession returned to the agency, the wagon was overhauled and found to contain the articles named in the indictment. The Winns didn't understand the language of the Utes, nor the Indians comprehend English, it was impossible to settle the point by discussion.

The Winns maintained that they did not know what articles Burgess had in the wagon or where he got them. They were covered over with hay, so that they were not seen. The jury evidently considered that the truth, for the prisoners were acquitted after one-half hour's consideration. And there was a few in the tribe of Winn. It will go back in a few days to its home at Vernal, among the tribe of Utes.

"What were you doing with so much soap at the agency? do Indians use soap?" was asked of Chief Clerk Goody, who was here as a witness for the government.

"They are learning," said he. "They dislike both soap and water. In fact, they would prefer rather take soap internally than externally, and we make them use it externally. Its use is one of the civilizing processes."

SCHOOL DISCIPLINE AT STAKE TO FIGHT THE SALT TRUST

TEACHERS AND PRINCIPALS SIDE WITH M'COY.

They Will Protest Against His Removal From the Oquirrh—New Superintendent May Advise.

If the board of education determines to disband Principal W. J. McCoy of the Oquirrh school, or to relocate him to a less important charge because of alleged undue severity in punishing Robble Muthall for violation of school rules, it is very probable that the board will have a warm protest on its hands from patrons of the school, the Oquirrh teachers and the entire aggregation of principals. It is known that on the board is divided on the question, and before finally passing upon it, the probability is that Superintendent Cooper's advice will be sought. The new superintendent will assume his duties tomorrow, and almost the first matter to be considered will be the Muthall case. Investigation of the case, with a view to pointing out the way for a satisfactory adjustment of the controversy, without endangering the high standard of discipline which obtains in the Oquirrh and nearly every other school in the city.

A meeting of the Oquirrh teachers was held yesterday afternoon to prepare for concerted action, if the emergency should arise. The whole matter was discussed dispassionately, and any-thing but a spirit of rebellion to the board was manifest. The unanimous sentiment was that for the sake of maintaining proper discipline in all the schools, the board could not afford to deal harshly with Principal McCoy, because he had simply done his duty by inflicting corporal punishment, within the rule, upon a refractory pupil, whose transgressions were declared to be arrogant and persistent. Instances were reported at the meeting of unruly pupils in other schools having become very defiant, relying upon the board's threatened dismissal of the principal, whose punishment of the Muthall boy had become a matter of public discussion. Teachers and principals generally representing the school side of the controversy, side with Professor McCoy, and they express the hope that Superintendent Cooper's services will be invoked by the board to satisfactorily solve the question.

SCHOOL DISCIPLINE AT STAKE TO FIGHT THE SALT TRUST

TEACHERS AND PRINCIPALS SIDE WITH M'COY.

They Will Protest Against His Removal From the Oquirrh—New Superintendent May Advise.

A little scheme cropped out in this city yesterday that may bring trouble to the Salt trust. This is the formation of an independent company under the title of "The Utah Salt & Soda company," with John W. Steel, an old salt man, at the head of it. The site of the proposed plant is about 500 acres of land having over one mile of frontage on the lake adjoining Saltair on the north. The plan proposed is to enclose the pond with a shallow dam and pump the water in with a Chinese pump at a slight cost for labor, which can be done.

It is also intended to manufacture soda on a small scale. This can be made at this point at a cost of 15 cents per pound, the salt being made on the ground, naturally by the action of the frost every winter. It is found in beds there now.

Since that time the show has, it is announced, been considerably enlarged and many new and novel features have been added. The show comes here almost direct from Chicago and St. Louis, and the performances given in Salt Lake City will be identical in every way with those presented in those cities.
